An internationally prominent faculty, state-of-the-art facilities and new technology combine to make the Department of Nutritional Sciences an excellent choice for students wanting to pursue a PhD degree. Found on the University of Oklahoma Health Sciences Center campus, access to a variety of patient populations is excellent. Collaborations with colleagues in other disciplines such as medicine, public health, pharmacy, nursing and dentistry are common.

The Oklahoma City area has affordable housing options, and the campus is readily accessible with ample parking for students.

Admission Requirements

Because faculty and students work together closely in the PhD program, prior to the application a prospective student must identify a faculty member who has expertise in the applicant's area of interest, has authority to chair a PhD committee, and agrees to serve as the student's advisor if admitted.

- Contact the Department of Nutritional Sciences to determine compatibility of educational goals with the program.
- Go to www.ah.ouhsc.edu/ns/ for a list of faculty and their interests and research activities.
- To see if a potential advisor has the authority to chair a doctoral committee (level 4), click on the name at the following web site: graduate.ouhsc.edu/faculty/graduate-faculty-roster.html
- Contact potential advisors.
